

State Department's National Security Institute (SUSI 2016-2019)

Dr. Muqtedar Khan served as Academic Director of the State Department's National Security Institute (SUSI 2016-2019). This prestigious and important state Department funded program brought national security experts from 18 different nations to the U.S., every year, to understand how Americans think about and institutionalize their national security. The program entailed over 50 lectures and many visits to institutions that shape US National Security such as military colleges, think tanks, government agencies and universities. An Alum of the department, Dr. Daniel Bottomley was the Program Director and several graduate students of the department, Luisa T. Torres, Justin Collier, Isa Haskologlu, Kathrin Reed, Kevin Dwyre, worked to make the program a success.
