HOW NOT TO THINK ABOUT POPULISM

Jan-Werner Müller, Princeton University

February 12, 2018

4:30 – 6:00 pm  |  Gore Hall 103

This lecture addresses the question of how best to understand populism and what structural changes in our modern democracies might have facilitated its emergence. It then turns to the matter of how professional politicians and citizens at large should deal with the challenge of populism. Finally, it makes some suggestions as to how the structural problems associated with contemporary democracies might be addressed.

Jan-Werner Müller works on democratic theory and the history of political thought. His books include Contesting Democracy: Political Ideas in Twentieth-Century Europe (Yale University Press, 2011) and Constitutional Patriotism (Princeton University Press, 2007). His most recent book, What is Populism? (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2016), has been translated to more than 20 languages.

“Müller’s sweeping critique of populism will both instruct and challenge anyone who seeks to understand the roots and nature of the political conflicts that are roiling Europe and the United States.”

- Michael Kazin, Author of The Populist Persuasion: An American History

“The most useful work to comprehend Trump’s appeal is What Is Populism? Müller defines populism’s most salient characteristics—antielitism, antipluralism, exclusivity—and explains Trump and other populists through that framework.”

- The Washington Post

“Populism is not just antiliberal, it is antidemocratic—the permanent shadow of representative politics. That’s Jan-Werner Müller’s argument in this brilliant book. There is no better guide to the populist passions of the present.”

- Ivan Krastev, International New York Times

This series is co-sponsored by Journalism Program; College of Arts & Sciences-Humanities; Center for Political Communication; School of Public Policy & Administration; and Departments of Anthropology; English; History; Languages, Literatures & Cultures; Political Science & International Relations; and Sociology & Criminal Justice

Visit www.cgas.udel.edu for the latest calendar of events.